Pseudorandomness is a term used to describe computational processes or systems that appear to be random but are actually not. This type of process imitates reality, creating an illusion of a natural process that is fundamentally a list of instructions that produces fixed outcomes based on the information it is given.

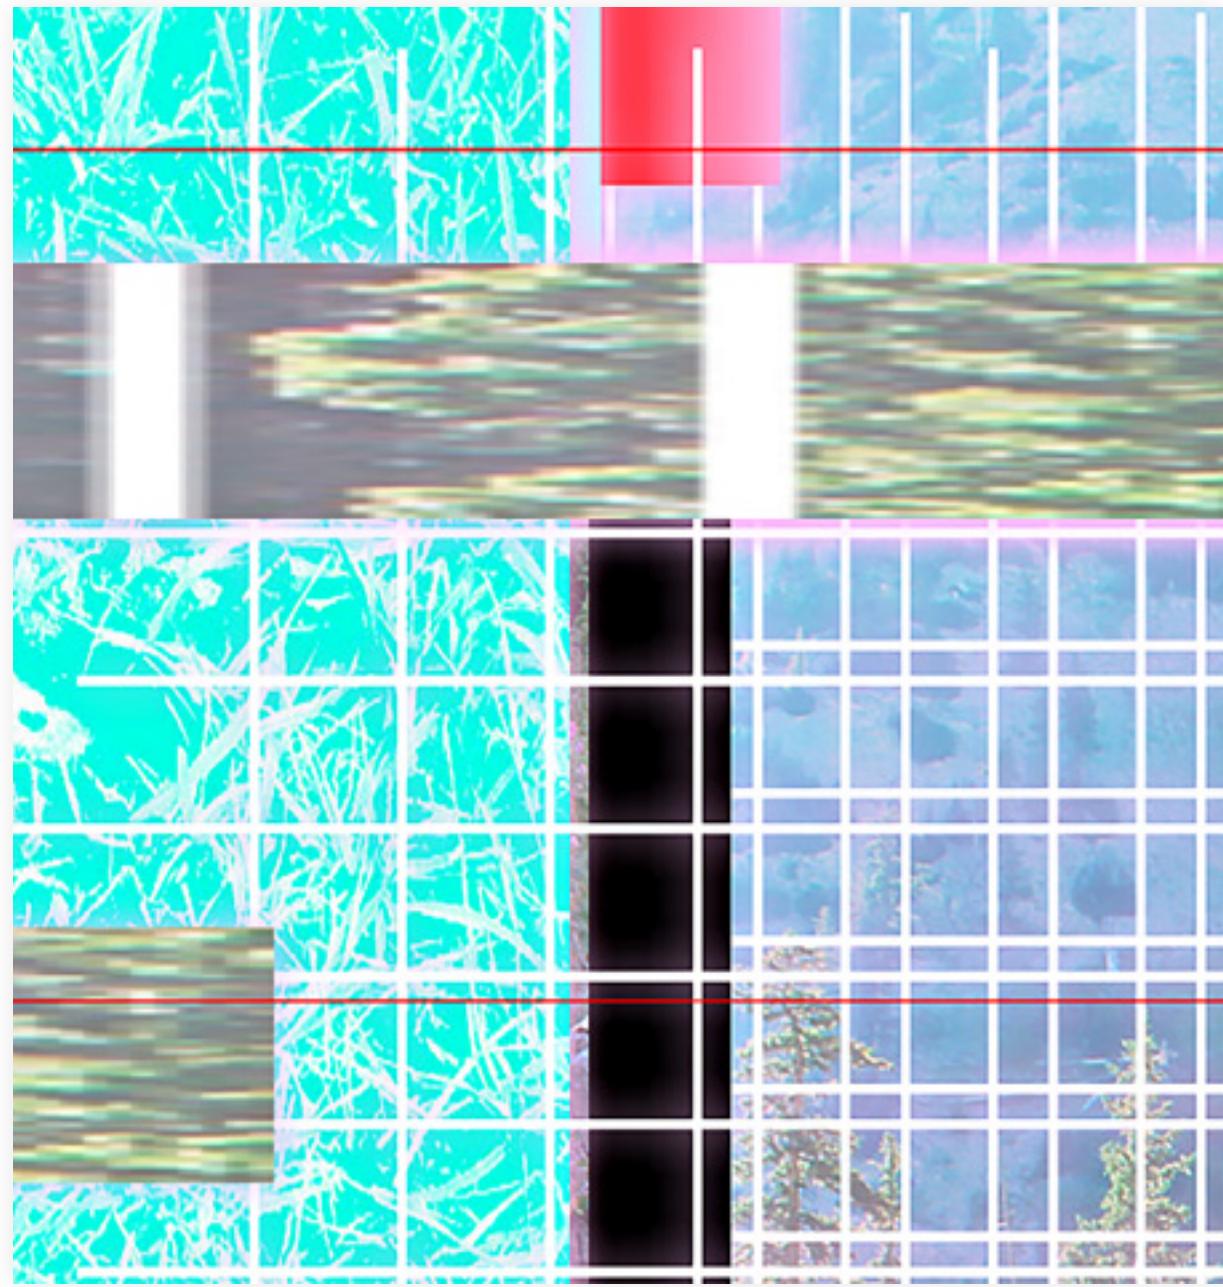

The images from Pseudorandom Landscape are a selection of computer generated abstractions from landscape imagery that have been created from this type of process through the input of names into the website pseudorandom-landscape.com.
